NUSS is an annual conference that brings together students from colleges and universities around Nebraska. During the conference, students give presentations about their research or theoretical work. Or, students may participate in panels about work-in-progress or about experiences like internships and study abroad. Presenting a paper is a great way to build your resume for graduate or professional school. Participating in NUSS is also an opportunity to meet other sociology students and faculty!

Paper Submission Options

1. Submit a paper to the paper competition. Cash prizes are awarded to the winning papers. Students who submit papers to the competition are also expected to present their papers during the conference.

2. Submit a paper or “work-in-progress” to present at the conference. This option may be right for students whose research is in-progress.

Students interested in participating in a panel to share their experiences about internships, study abroad, or community engagement and activism should also reach out!

SUBMISSION DEADLINE: OCTOBER 25, 2022

Submission Details

- NUSS is open to sociological papers written by any undergraduate student while they attended a Nebraska college or university.
- Students are encouraged to submit research papers, theoretical papers, or literature review papers written as part of coursework, independent study, or research assistantship.
- Papers may be co-authored with other students but not co-authored with a faculty member.
